Jackson Fine Art is pleased to open a new line-up of exhibitions, our second in a new and expanded location, unified by their exploration of classical subjects and shared art-historical references but unique in the method by which they allow these common threads to collide with the contemporary. Mona Kuhn's multidisciplinary Kings Road combines the artist's characteristic study of form — both human and architectural — with her emerging use of video installation and solarized silver gelatin to create a wholly immersive and partially imagined investigation of Rudolph Schindler's groundbreaking 1922 residence. Icons pairs influential early fashion photographer George Hoyningen-Huene with one of the most celebrated contemporary photographers within this tradition, Bastiaan Woudt. The influence of Surrealism — direct for George Hoyningen-Huene, who worked with Man Ray and photographed for Elsa Schiaparelli; material for Kuhn, whose solarized prints borrow their method from Ray, Lee Miller, André Breton, and others; and referential for Woudt, in his experimental blending of elements of Surrealist and mid-century fashion photography with 21st century technique — haunts each of the exhibition spaces.

For Kings Road, Kuhn turns her camera on the life and personal home of architect Rudolph M. Schindler, whose cooperative dwelling at 835 Kings Road in West Hollywood was conceived as a design and social experiment and quickly became an avant-garde meeting place for artists and intellectuals like Marlene Dietrich, Albert Einstein, and Frank Lloyd Wright. Incorporating a variety of media — chromogenic dye coupler prints presenting the muted palate and delicate materials comprising Schindler's spare design, careful reproductions of primary sources from the architect's archive, and solarized silver prints of a timeless and spectral nude figure, Kuhn crafts a narrative that extends well beyond the historical record. Inspired by a found letter in which Schindler dismisses a former lover ("Your dreams will never, like so many — meet reality"), Kuhn allows a mysterious nude subject to wander the space at Kings Road, representing what David Dorenbaum calls the place "where the fissure between architecture and time is about to dissolve." By interrogating a paradigm of utopian design that now stands eerily empty and treating both the building and its ghostly "inhabitant" to her gift for subtle abstraction, Kuhn creates a void onto which the present-day viewer can project their own meaning. While Kings Road has been shown at the AD&A Museum in Santa Barbara, and at the Kunsthau Göttingen in Germany in an exhibition curated by Gerhard Steidl, this will be the debut of the series in a gallery setting. A monograph, Kuhn's eighth, was published by Steidl in 2022.

Bastiaan Woudt and George Hoyningen-Huene: Icons, similarly celebrates a kind of dissolution of time — the cross-generational influence of one artist on another. Hoyningen-Huene's limited edition platinum palladium prints depict a cast of characters that could have been one of Schindler's guest lists. Lee Miller gazes at Agneta Fischer, trapped within a crystal ball; Josephine Baker feigns modesty with a narrow bolt of fabric and a string of pearls; models wear early Balenciaga gowns and Schiaparelli beachwear. Drawing on an aesthetic that Hoyningen-Huene helped to pioneer, Woudt's compositions feature the glamour and elegance of early fashion photography, while charcoal tones and a two-dimensional perspective ground the works squarely in the present day.

Also on view will be a selection of works by Slovakian photographer Mária Švarbová, whose bright and playful images of nearly-identical bathers bely a deeper commentary on the controlled simplicity of her childhood in the Eastern Bloc. Her Swimming Pools series has been published in two monographs and earned her a 2018 Hasselblad Masters Award in Fine Art Photography.

On Friday, June 9th from 6 to 8pm, we'll hold an opening reception with Mona Kuhn in attendance. On Saturday, June 10th at 11am, join us for an artist talk and gallery walk with Mona Kuhn. Books will be available for sale and signing. On Tuesday, June 27th from 6 to 8pm, we'll host a second reception with Bastiaan Woudt in attendance.

About Bastiaan Woudt

Bastiaan Woudt (b. 1987, Alkmaar, Netherlands) spent his youth in the night clubs and underground raves of Amsterdam. While always being a fan of clean classic imagery, Bastiaan picked up a camera later in life. Drawn to the medium first by a desire to record his family and others around him, he quickly became consumed with image making. Not long after those initial photographs Bastiaan decided to dedicate himself to the photographic medium. In the past decade he has published 7 books and been featured in numerous magazines. His work has been exhibited in numerous galleries and museums, such as Fotografiska and Museum Kranenburg. In addition to his own artistic pursuits, Bastiaan runs I605 Publishers, a platform for emerging and established artists, and a publishing house for photographic books and objects.
